

Long-haul trucking in America became established in the 1950's with the opening of inter-state highways and the establishment of organised fleet trucking operations.

Driving a typical 1950's rig was hard work. Typical trucks of the day had no power assisted steering and the over-cab sleeping cabin was pretty basic.

In America, most of the truck drivers also own the vehicles they drive. They can therefore choose the combination of engine & gearbox which best suits the trucks intended use.

Ray O'Hanesian has driven his Kenworth cab-over truck over 5,000,000 miles during 35 years behind the wheel for three different haulage companies. This is believed to be the current record.

- MACK
- WHITE
- FORD
- PETERBILT
- STIRLING
- NAVISTAR
- FREIGHTLINER
- KENWORTH
- DODGE
- GMC